JUSTIFICATION:
Changes proposed under (1) above will add four units to the number of lower-division units required for a Sociology/Administrative Studies major by requiring one additional lower-division substantive course. It also adds eight more units by moving the statistics and research methods requirement from the upper-division to the lower-division. This brings the required credits into alignment with other departments, and the movement of the statistics and methods requirement to the lower-division makes us more consistent with other UC and CSU sociology departments. Most importantly these changes will better prepare students for the demands of upper-division courses. Changes proposed under (2) above will reduce the number of upper division units required for the major by twelve (compensating for the increase in the lower-division requirement) and formally recognizes existing changes in the curriculum and the addition of family and gender studies as an area of study within the department.

EFFECTIVE: Fall 2005
